THE PITCH DECK

Twelve slides that don't sit still.

The SANCTUM pitch deck is twelve slides, each a living scene — a procedural portal, a hyperspace tunnel, a threat-scanner, a self-assembling constellation. It hides behind a decoy and opens only to those who find the door and speak the protocol. Type flows like steel; every motion is hand-budgeted on a beat-locked timeline. A design system of ink, kyber, ember and threat holds it together — and a physical edition ships alongside, so the story reads as sharply on paper as it moves on screen.

THE APP — PROJECT SANCTUM

A dead shortwave blog that hides a living network.

PROJECT SANCTUM — a dead shortwave blog from 2013 that hides a living secret network. Its cover, SIGNAL & STATIC, posts real history — UVB-76, numbers stations, the Wow! Signal — but one post, "the hum at 0528", teaches the frequency that answers back. Find the glowing ring in the photos, knock three times, speak 0528, and the blog was never a blog: a cinematic, playable cover story of scroll, sound and hidden games. The Archivist tests each candidate through three rites, minting a rank, callsign and sigil. Press ~ and it vanishes. We hide in plain sight.
